Learn to cope with stress

We hope you had a joyous holiday. Now is the time to prepare for the New Year. Before you make those New Year's resolutions, "stop and think," set realistic goals, prioritize, make a spending plan and stick to it.

Are you stressed about money? Family? Kids? Your job? You are not alone. In fact, 79 percent of Americans feel they experience higher than healthy levels of stress. Learn about stress to help gain control of it before it gains control of you!

Stress is a reaction to change. When the demands of life override the resources you have, you may become stressed. Stress is a formula of adding up the:

Life's DEMANDS + the RESOURCES you have to manage the demands

= Your response and reaction to the stressor

What can you do?

- Change the stressor.
- Change the way you react to the stressor.
- Review your resources.
- Practice stress-reducing behaviors.

Changing the stressor—Many of us are prone to just live with stressful events; however, in many cases there are stressors that can be avoided or eliminated.

- Talk it out. What is the stressor? What can you do about it?
- Avoid difficult people—focus on positive relationships.
- Eliminate unnecessary commitments—say "no."
- Avoid multi-tasking—doing one thing at a time is better for you.
- Avoid trying to control people or circumstances.

Dealing with stress—You have a choice. Stress can control your life or you can be resourceful and find a way to control it!

- Pace yourself. Break the whole plan into smaller parts to manage one step at a time.
- It is often the small things that send us into a tizzy (like losing your car keys or breaking a dish).
- It is not stress that makes us stop all together; it is our reaction to it.

Extension Today

Shirley Smith

- Being flexible and resourceful is key to managing stress.
- Not all stress is bad; some is motivating and energizing.

Changing your reaction to a stressor—We are also able to change how we perceive and react to stressors by putting a positive spin on a situation or seeing the sunny side of the situation.

- Practice seeing the bright side of things.
- See humor in tough situations.

- Develop an attitude of gratitude.
- Adjust your expectations.

Review your resources—Take some time to think of the potential resources you can call upon to help you deal with the stress you are experiencing.

- Seek supportive people to help you.
- Talk with family, friends, and colleagues about ways to reduce the stress.
- Get help from your faith community, government agencies and non-profits.

Stress-reducing behaviors—There are a lot of specific behaviors you can undertake to reduce stress.

- Eat healthy foods.
- Get enough rest.
- Engage in physical activity (stretching, walking, dancing).
- Practice relaxation (slow intentional breathing, positive visualization).
- Learn to manage your anger.
- Simplify and reduce your to-do list.
- Practice forgiveness.
- Appreciate the positive—engage in positive self-talk.
- Find opportunities to help others and serve your community.

Turn and burn

You may be one of the lucky people who received a brightly-wrapped aerobics video this Holiday. Surely a gift that will keep on giving... or hopefully talking. And along with exercise, let's try re-defining the word "diet." if we think of a healthy, low-fat diet instead of a reducing diet, we can learn to eat for a lifetime instead of trying to "blitz off" 10 pounds. Turning around our thinking about diets and burning off weight with exercise will be a good start on a healthy New Year!

Have a Happy, Healthy Holiday!
