Sandhills names McAllister-McRae director of student services

Sandhills Community College has named Hoke County's Rosa McAllister-McRae director of Student Services Operations at the Sandhills Hoke Center. The new position at the center is intended to aid in the expansion of the curriculum/college credit programs in Hoke County.

"McAllister-McRae will be a great asset to residents of Hoke County," a Sandhills spokesperson said. "Sandhills Community College has long had a strong Continuing Education presence at the Hoke Center and staff representation on site for the SandHoke Early College High School program."

McAllister-McRae will serve as the curriculum/college credit liaison for student services in the areas of admissions, testing, advising, recruitment, financial aid and counseling. She will work closely with county businesses and civic and local leaders to increase enrollment at the college and to expand educational opportunities in Hoke County.

"We are excited that the College has the opportunity to have someone serving at the Hoke Center from the division of Student Services," said dean of Campus Life D.J. Farmer. "Rosa has been an advocate for this community for many years."

Having spent most of her life as a resident of Hoke County, McAllister-McRae is well known to many in the area. She has been on the board of education for many years.

She has been employed by Sandhills for 19 years. She taught Adult Basic Education, prepared students for the GED tests, and worked in the Job Readiness Program. After moving from Continuing Education to the curriculum side of the College, she has served as an admissions coordinator, a Residence and Transfer coordinator and a personal counselor.

McAllister-McRae received a bachelor's degree in Psychology from Fayetteville State University and a master's in Professional Counseling from Webster University. She holds a North Carolina license in counseling and is also a national certified counselor.

Sandhills Hoke Center kicks off mini-mester

The curriculum division of Sandhills Community College and the Sandhills Hoke Center are beginning an initiative at the Hoke Center for curriculum/college credit courses and are expanding Student Services personnel. The initiative will begin with the fall mini-mester.

Fall mini-mester is a shortened, 10-week semester, which awards full semester credit hours. The college will offer these at the Hoke Center as evening classes. Most of the courses are fully transferrable to universities in the UNC system or apply to associate degrees. The classes will begin on Wednesday, September 25.

A special kick-off registration event will be held at the Hoke Center on Wednesday, September 11 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Student Services representatives from Sandhills will be on hand to answer questions about classes, schedules, transfer, financial aid and other issues for prospective students. Students will be able to take the placement test and register for fall mini-mester classes at that time.

Teach your children math, science in the kitchen

Is your kitchen big, small, simple, or fancy? It does not really matter because your kitchen offers many opportunities for your child to learn. When your child is allowed to assist you in the kitchen, they are exposed to literacy, science, math and social skills.

Literacy—When your child participates in meal preparation, language skill development is encouraged. When cooking, pouring, or stirring, name the ingredients or utensils that are being used. Your child will also see the environmental print. Environmental print is found outside of books. It has a meaning that is attached to everyday life experiences (signs, labels on foods or containers, recipes, etc.). You can let your child assist you in making the grocery list or menu plan, and finding the food that is needed in the pantry or in the grocery store when shopping. Let him "read" the recipe and look for numbers or letters.

Science—Your child becomes

a scientist in the making when they assist in the kitchen. They begin to see how foods will change forms when they are mixed—dry ingredients such as a pancake mix mixed with a liquid such as water becoming a pourable batter; change temperature—water (a liquid) from the faucet placed in freezer becomes ice (a solid); or are cooked—an egg that is fried, scrambled, boiled, or poached. They use all of their senses as they are observing. Their reasoning skills are encouraged as they can make predictions to see what will happen. If I mix the yellow and blue food coloring in the white cake frosting, will the color change from white to blue or yellow or will it become a different color? They can learn where food comes from and what part of the plant is eaten—potatoes grow in the ground and are attached to the root of the plant, apples come from the tiny bloom that grows on the tree.

Math—As your child explores the kitchen, he will find interesting and meaningful problems that he can solve. He can decide how to stack the cans that were purchased at the store in the cabinet so that they do not fall. One to one correspondence can be learned by letting him set the table—how many spoons, plates, napkins, etc. is needed for the family members. He is also able to work on sorting and classifying skills when he is helping to unload the dishwasher or unpack the groceries. He will need to decide where the item needs to go—in the pantry or refrigerator, in the drawer or the cabinet. Allowing him to help in preparing and cooking meals can also encourage measuring and weighing. He can work on counting as well as comparing sizes, shapes and volume. He is also learning about sequencing and time concepts.

Children also work on developing their motor skills as they pour, stir, scoop and mix. They will learn about safety. They can work on their social skills such as working together cooperatively. They can learn to have patience especially if they are assisting you in cooking a treat such as cookies—they have to wait until the cookies are cooked before they are able to enjoy them. They may also learn to try new foods if they are involved in the preparation of them.

As you can see, there are unlimited opportunities for learning in your kitchen so spend some time in the kitchen with your child and have a serving of fun and memories.

Parents As Teachers is a free and voluntary program that is available to all families with children ages 0-5 who live in Hoke County. Parent educators are available to help you be your child's first, best and most influential teacher. If you are interested in the Parents As Teachers program, call 910-875-2000 or stop by the Hoke County Cooperative Extension office beside Turlington School.
